> TRAYMORE FRIDAY CHATS AN ATLANTIC LINER

Some like to take an ocean voyage as a vacation. The palatial steamships have most of the accommodations of a fine hotel and they have a complete detachment from home troubles. Of course, there is that little contrariety—the inexorable rolling of the ship—which makes one long for the firm earth.

• • • Now the Traymore, built at the edge of the sea, is like a huge palatial Atlantic liner. The ocean breezes blow over its three decks and in the evenings the brilliancy of the vast marble Exchange far surpasses any salon of a steamer. Indeed, he who desires an ocean voyage could hardly do better than come to the Traymore. It has all the advantages of an Atlantic liner without that uneasy, queasy, rolling motion and, too, without danger from submarines. • • • Steamer rugs and chairs are furnished gratuitously by the hotel.

Love Makes Bob White Bold.

So wonderful a thing is love.
It overcometh even fear:
It dares all things and gladly gives Up life lisself for those held dear.

When Bob White so unexpectedly heard that far-away whistle and knew that it was the whistle of one of his children, the one whom they had all given up as dead, supposing him to have been killed many days before by the hunter, his joy knew no bounds.

"You stay here to watch after the others while I go to find him," said he to Mrs. Bob.
